THE FUTURE FOR 'DREAMERS'

The conservative majority Supreme Court Tuesday showed support for President Trump's hardline 2017 immigration policy to rescind the DACA program. DACA currently shields about 660,000 immigrants, including approximately 30,000 New Yorkers, from deportation. The majority of 'Dreamers' are Hispanic young adults. 2

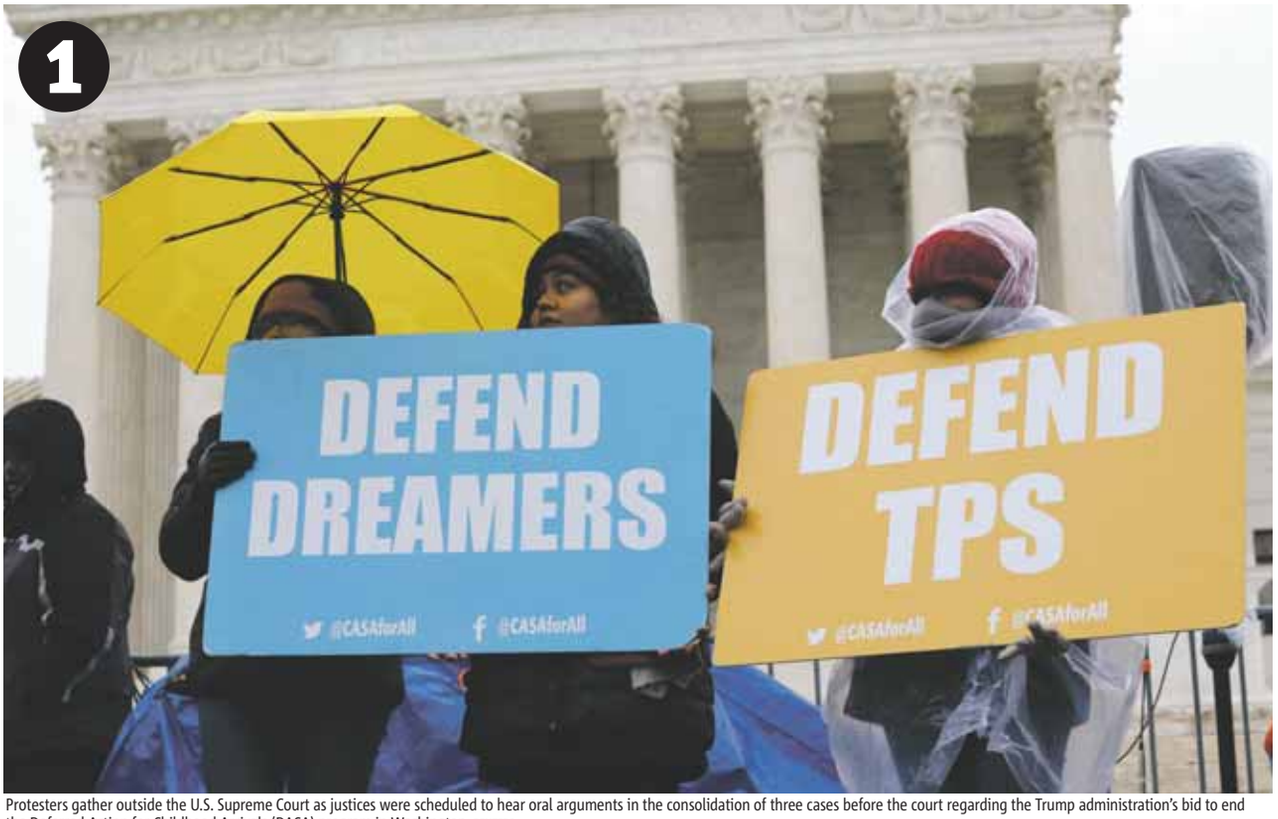
Supreme Court justices lean toward Trump on ending DACA

Trump has been trying to rescind DACA since 2017.



Protesters gather outside the U.S. Supreme Court as justices were scheduled to hear oral arguments in the consolidation of three cases before the court regarding the Trump administration's bid to end the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program in Washington. REUTERS

Conservative U.S. Supreme Court justices on Tuesday appeared sympathetic to President Donald Trump's effort to rescind a program that protects from deportation hundreds of thousands of immigrants who entered the United States illegally as children – dubbed "Dreamers" – part of his tough immigration policies.

Several of the five conservative justices appeared skeptical that courts can even review the Republican president's 2017 plan to end the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program, which had been implemented in 2012 by his Democratic predecessor Barack Obama. Even if the court finds that it can be reviewed, conservative justices indicated they think Trump's administration gave a reasonable explanation for its decision.

Liberal justices emphasized the large number of individuals, businesses and others that have relied on the program.

The court's 5-4 conservative majority includes two justices – Neil Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh – appointed by Trump.

The justices heard the administration's appeals of lower court rulings in California, New York and the District of Columbia that blocked Trump's move as unlawful and left DACA in place.

Trump's administration has argued that Obama exceeded his constitutional powers when he created DACA by executive action, bypassing Congress. Trump has made his hardline immigration policies – cracking down on legal and illegal immigration and pursuing construction of a wall along the U.S.-Mexican border – a centerpiece of his presidency and 2020 re-election campaign.

Kavanaugh said there is no reason to think that the administration's consideration of the impact its decision would have on individuals, when weighed against its contention that the DACA program was unlawful from the beginning, was anything other than a "considered decision."

Conservative Chief Justice John Roberts – who could be the pivotal vote in deciding the case – questioned whether there was much more that needed to be added to the administration's rationale even if the court were to rule in favor of the challengers and send the issue back for further review.

The challengers who sued to stop Trump's action included a collection of states such as California and New York, people currently protected by the program and civil rights groups.

Were the court to rule in favor of the challengers it would merely prolong the uncertainty for "Dreamers," Gorsuch said.

"What good would another five years of litigation ... serve?" Gorsuch asked.

DACA currently shields about 660,000 immigrants – mostly Hispanic young adults – from deportation and provides them work permits, though not a path to citizenship. REUTERS

2 Jimmy Carter recovering after brain procedure

Former U.S. President Jimmy Carter was recovering at an Atlanta hospital on Tuesday after safely undergoing a procedure to relieve pressure on his brain from bleeding caused by recent falls, the Carter Center said in a statement. The country's oldest living president at age 95, Carter was admitted to Emory University Hospital on Monday evening for the scheduled procedure, which took place three weeks after he suffered a minor pelvic fracture in a fall at his home in Plains, Georgia. "There are no complications from the surgery. President Carter will remain in the hospital as long as advisable for observation," the statement said. REUTERS

3 Juul to cut $1 billion in costs as new CEO aims for reboot

Juul Labs Inc will cut nearly $1 billion in costs next year, a company official said on Tuesday, as its new chief executive officer tries to turn around the e-cigarette maker following a regulatory crackdown. K.C. Crosthwaite, a former executive at major shareholder Altria, is tasked with fixing the company's battered public image and shrinking valuation as the regulatory moves on vaping threaten to upend the fast-growing industry. The official also said Juul would cut around 650 jobs, or 16% of its workforce, starting Tuesday. The company previously said it would cut 10-15% of its workforce by the end of this year. "As the vapor category undergoes a necessary reset, this reorganization will help JUUL Labs focus on reducing underage use, investing in scientific research, and creating new technologies," Crosthwaite said. 4 Mark Sanford drops bid to challenge Trump

Former U.S. Representative Mark Sanford of South Carolina has abandoned his long-shot bid to challenge President Donald Trump for the Republican presidential nomination in 2020, he said on Tuesday. Sanford, 59, a longtime Trump critic, announced his campaign two months ago. Two other Republicans are running against Trump: former Massachusetts Governor Bill Weld and former U.S. Representative Joe Walsh of Illinois. Sanford attributed his decision to end his bid to remove Trump as the Republican nominee on the inability to attract attention to his key issue, the national debt. "I am suspending my race for the presidency because impeachment has made my goal of making the debt, deficit and spending issue a part of this presidential debate impossible right now," Sanford said in a statement. Hong Kong universities become 'battlefields' as citywide violence spreads

Police condemned by pro-democracy lawmakers.

Police in Hong Kong battled pro-democracy protesters at several university campuses in sometimes savage clashes, as parts of the city were paralyzed including Hong Kong's Central financial district that was tear-gassed for a second day running.

The flare-ups occurred a day after police shot an unarmed protester at close range and a man was doused with petrol and set on fire in some of the worst violence since the protests began nearly five months ago in the China-ruled city.

At the rural Chinese University near Tai Po, some of the fiercest fighting broke out at night as riot police stormed the campus where hundreds of protesters congregated, firing a barrage of tear gas, rubber bullets and water cannon.

Hundreds of masked protesters, many of them students, hurled back petrol bombs, rocks and bricks, some launched with catapults. After the clashes, dozens of the injured lay sprawled on the ground at a nearby sports pitch.

The chaotic night scenes of explosions, smoke plumes, yelling and sustained gunfire, which left scores of injured students sprawled on the ground, stoked a sense of dread among some who recalled the 1989 Tiananmen Square crackdown by Chinese troops on pro-democracy protesters in Beijing.

"The fear among the students is so strong," said Wing Long, a 25-year-old theology student. "That's why we've gathered today to stop it from happening."

The police, however, said protesters in the campus had thrown debris and petrol bombs onto a nearby highway linking the Northern New Territories with Kowloon, bringing traffic to a standstill in a haze of tear gas smoke.

> "The fear among the students is so strong. That's why we've gathered today to stop it from happening."
> Wing Long, a 25-year-old theology student

The city's 24 pro-democracy lawmakers condemned the police in a joint statement, saying the nonstop firing of tear gas had turned the campus into a "battlefield," while urging the international community to speak out for Hong Kong's youngsters to "prevent the recurrence of the tragedy of 1989."

Medics on the scene told Reuters that at least 60 people were injured.

At City University, students in hard hats and gas masks had spent much of the day barricading the campus, making homemade shields, and stockpiled bricks and petrol bombs on bridges and other approaches.

They overran the campus and smashed up glass panels in the adjacent Festival Walk shopping mall and set fire to a giant Christmas tree.

Earlier in the day, more than 1,000 protesters, many wearing office clothes and face masks, rallied in Central for a second day during lunch hour, blocking roads below some of the city's tallest skyscrapers and most expensive real estate.

After they had dispersed, police fired tear gas at the remaining protesters on old, narrow Pedder Street. Police made more than a dozen arrests, many pinned up on the pavement against the wall of luxury jeweller Tiffany & Co.

Police said masked "rioters" had committed "insane" acts, throwing trash, bicycles and other debris on to metro tracks and overhead power lines, paralyzing transport in the former British colony. TV footage showed activists dropping heavy objects from overpasses on to traffic below, just missing a motorcyclist. REUTERS

Not knowing what to do IMMEDIATELY after a car (or work) accident can lead to devastating medical and legal consequences... even if you are not at fault

Crucial Facts Everyone Injured In A Car Accident Should Know

Knowing this could save you from a medical or legal disaster...

NYC - If you have been injured in a car or work accident... there are two things you must know to make sure you get the best possible care and that your rights protected.

In just a moment, I'm going to give you that extremely valuable information that will probably save you from making a costly mistake.

But first, let me ask you this...

You were just in a car accident. It's a tiny "fender bender." And it's not your fault... someone hit you from behind while you were stopped.

The other person is nice. And upset. They say you don't need to call the police or get insurance involved. They will pay you for the damages.

Should you do it?

The answer is

ABSOLUTELY NOT

Don't start dealing with the other party and say "let's deal with this on the side".

Let's face it… you don't know who these people are and what they are going to do.

We can give you plenty of examples of people trying to be nice and doing this only to find out the next day that the other person all of a sudden changed their story and there is a huge legal mess.

You may even be charged with leaving the scene of an accident. Do not leave the scene. That can be looked at as illegal.

Call the police. Get law enforcement there to document that the accident took place and exactly what happened.

Quick aside: If this is a work injury… call your supervisor. Right away!

Don't go to your supervisor a week later saying you were injured. That can look inappropriate and lead to issues.

Back the the car accident - if you do not feel well after an accident, tell the police officer and they will arrange for you to be taken to a hospital.

But even if you are feeling OK… there is something call D.O.S. … or "Delayed Onset Syndrome."

This means you can feel fine right after the accident but pain and symptoms can come hours, days or even weeks later.

This is pretty well documented in the medical literature. So, you should always go to a doctor shortly after an accident just to be checked over and see what's really going on.

And of course - take pictures of the accident. Everyone has cell phones nowadays… so take a few shots of the scene and the cars involved.

As soon as you can, contact your insurance company to report the accident and let them know what happened. Then follow up with the law enforcement agencies to get official reports of the accident.

Most accidents cause damage to the human body that can last a lifetime… so they should not be taken lightly. Make sure the accident is documented and you see the right doctor who deals with these types of injuries. With trauma.

Many people believe they should go to an attorney first. This may be because of all the legal advertising for accident victims… and that we live in a very litigious society. In other words… everyone either wants to sue or is afraid of getting sued.

There is no doubt… hiring the right attorney is extremely important.

But even more crucial is going to the right doctor.

It is extremely important you go to physicians who are trained in diagnosing, analyzing injuries and managing proper treatment.

Back to DOS: One of the major issues with Delayed Onset Syndrome is that if you go to the wrong doctor and they miss the proper diagnosis your injury can remain dormant. Hidden and untreated for long periods of time. That "minor" injury may turn into a major problem for the rest of your life.

This is why is is VERY important that you get examined by a doctor… or group of physicians… who is trained in these trauma related injuries. In other words… make sure the proper expert is evaluating you.

What about going to a doctor your attorney picks for you?

Often times attorneys have relationships with doctors and make referrals. This may or may not be the best doctor for you. Are they experts at legally documenting a case AND diagnosing and treating these types of injuries? Will you be personally comfortable with this doctor. That is something you have to think about and find out.

Is this a doctor who just runs a mill of car accident and work comp patients in and out… getting referrals from a relationship with attorneys… or is this a doctor who really cares about you?

Because...while the legal issues are important… the doctors job is to minimize the injury and make sure you get it treated the best way possible and aren't left with debilitating and lifelong issues.

You want to do a little research when choosing your doctor. Listen to your attorneys legal advice… but they are not doctors and they should not be directing all your medical care.

Car or work accidents can be life changing events. Knowing what to do can be the difference between navigating the legal and medical system smoothly... or a complete disaster. Not to mention lifelong injuries and bills. You need a guide to help you make the right decisions.

To sum it up… you want a doctor who is both a skilled expert at diagnosing and treating these types of traumatic injuries… and… documenting your injuries for any legal issues or the case you may have. Both of these things are a must.

Finding doctors with ALL these skills is the key...

Finding doctors that can give you the best possible medical care and are also skilled at documenting your case, dealing with insurance companies... their attorneys etc. etc. etc.

How can you find doctors with these skills?

Here's how: NYC Pain MD is a medical clinic located in New York City that has expert doctors that are trained and skilled at some of the best medical treatments available today... and will give you all the medical guidance you need for your legal case.

We have treated countless accident victims and worked with many great attorneys.

What type of car or work accident injuries do we treat?

Here is a short list of the common one's we successfully treat all the time:

- Neck Pain including whiplash, bulging and herniated discs.
- Back Pain including bulging and herniated discs and sciatica.
- Radiating pain in the arms and legs
- Knees
- Headaches
- Shoulders
- Hands and wrists
- Feet and ankles
- Various soft tissue injuries to muscle, ligaments and tendons
- And more.

One of the best things about NYC Pain MD is that it has both advanced treatments and medical technology all under one roof. Patients love this because they do not have to travel to a bunch of hospitals, surgi-centers or other doctors to get most of the treatments they need.

And results are great because the doctors are all working together to get you out of pain.

And if you have s condition or need a treatment we don't offer... the proper referral will be made to get you the best possible care needed.

If this sounds like something you'd like to check out... now you can . . . for free.

As a community service, NYC Pain MD offers free screenings to anyone injured in a car or work accident.

During this screening, you get to talk to one of the doctors and get all your questions answered. The questions answered on how your injuries can best be treated by the NYC Pain MD medical team (or elsewhere if necessary).

The best part of the screening is you'll finally know what's going on ... and what you can do about it. Most patients are seriously relieved after this screening - having us on their side and knowing exactly what do do next.

How To Get Your Free Screening...

Just call us at 877-285-8110 and tell the scheduling coordinator you would like to schedule your free screening. As long as you are one of the first 50, it is 100% free with no obligation. There is NOTHING to pay for and all your questions will be answered without stress. And...you can proceed exactly as you would like from there.

Warning: The clinic is very busy mostly from word of mouth. But we wanted to open up this opportunity to as many car or work accident victims as possible.

But because we get so much demand ... we have to limit this opportunity to only 50 screenings for the time being.

You have absolutely nothing to lose and possibly everything to gain. We suggest you call now to reserve a spot before they are all taken. Just Call: 877-285-8110 (Want more info - go to: https://painmdny.com/car-accident/)

Officials team up to combat anti-Semitic violence in Brooklyn

Brooklynites are taking a stand against hate crimes.

BECCA GLASSER-BAKER
Rebecca.Glasser@metro.us

No Place for Hate schools receive their designation in the following ways:

- Building inclusive and safe communities in which respect and equity are the goals and where all students can thrive.
- Empowering students, faculty, administration and family members to take a stand against bias and bullying by incorporating new and existing programs under one powerful message.
- Sending a clear, unified message that all students have a place where they belong.

Anti-Defamation League CEO Jonathan Greenblatt and Borough President Eric L. Adams, plus local elected officials, local faith leaders and other community partners are teaming up to combat anti-Semitic violence in Brooklyn.

There are 600,000 Jewish people in Brooklyn, including a large population of Syrian Jews. It was reported that 52 percent of hate crimes in New York City are targeting the Jewish community.

Ninety-three incidents of anti-Semitic violence, harassment and vandalism took place in 2018 alone. Thirteen of 17 violent anti-Semitic assaults citywide took place in Brooklyn. The DA shared that offenders of these crimes have recently fallen into one of these three categories of people: mentally ill, hateful or juveniles under age 17.

On Tuesday, leaders announced a new initiative to help curb and reverse the rise in hate attacks and anti-Semitic violence. Greenblatt shared that the ADL will be bumping up it's "No Place for Hate" program within schools. They believe that education is key in combating hate crimes against marginalized communities — especially recently, with teens committing some crimes.

According to the website, the No Place for Hate program is described as an initiative for "a school climate improvement framework that provides PreK–12 schools with an organizing framework for combating bias, bullying, and hatred, leading to long-term solutions for creating and maintaining a positive and equitable climate."

No Place for Hate is making an additional $250,000 investment for the 2019-20 year. This will allow them to reach at least 10,000 more students. Additionally, this new outreach will include 40 new schools within the Brooklyn area. The ADL and Adams made it clear that the program is the first in a series of steps to help the marginalized communities in Brooklyn.

News of this initiative comes after six attacks targeting the Jewish community that took place within the past week-and-a-half. NYPD Hate Crimes is investigating these incidents.

NY Courts officially add transgender, nonbinary & other gender options to jury documents

New York's court system is expanding the gender options on jury documents to include people who identify as transgender, nonbinary, intersex and other.

A state court spokesperson, Lucian Chalfen, told CBS that the judicial system is aiming to have the updated juror information cards ready for distribution by January. The cards tell people that they need to attend jury.

At the moment, the cards only have a male and female option on them.

Besides the juror information cards, NY will also be changing the juror questionnaire, used during the selection process. As of now, it only lists male and female as options, but the updated questionnaire will include a question about how folks want to be addressed.

State Sen. Brad Hoylman, a Manhattan Democrat, stated, "People don't easily fit into boxes that can be checked." Hoylman added, "This is a step in recognizing the reality of nonbinary identification."

GETTY IMAGES

Last month, Sen. Hoylman sent a letter to the court system pushing for the expansion of gender options. Sen. Hoylman hopes that this addition can help get a more reflective jury pool and help deter discrimination in jury decisions.

Besides the NY Courts making moves to support LGBTQ+, Governor Cuomo signed new legislation called the Restoration of Honor Act, which gives LGBTQ+ veterans who were denied honorable discharges because of their gender identity and sexual orientation the right to apply to have their NY veterans benefits restored. Democrats vow to insulate impeachment inquiry from 'sham investigations'

Televised public hearings begin on Wednesday.

The impeachment inquiry into U.S. President Donald Trump will not be allowed to become a venue for "sham investigations" into Democratic presidential hopeful Joe Biden and his son, the head of a congressional committee leading the probe said on Tuesday.

Representative Adam Schiff, the Democratic chairman of the House of Representatives Intelligence Committee, made the vow as the White House and its Republican allies in Congress set up lines of defense ahead of televised public hearings that begin on Wednesday.

> "President Trump's pressure campaign was 'out of bounds,' and every time he insists that it was 'perfect' he is saying that he is above the law."
> Nancy Pelosi

Schiff, who is spearheading the investigation into whether Trump pressured Ukraine to target one of the president's domestic political rivals, also said he would not allow the hearings to be derailed by a debunked conspiracy theory that Ukraine - not Russia - interfered in the 2016 U.S. election.

Some Republicans have defended Trump's dealings with Ukraine by saying he was motivated by a desire to root out corruption in the Eastern European nation and get to the bottom of the election meddling four years ago.

The inquiry will enter a critical phase on Wednesday when lawmakers hold their first public, televised hearings and begin to question witnesses. The proceedings are scheduled to start at 10 a.m. EST.

Schiff's comments in a note to committee members suggested he would not allow Republicans to call Biden's son Hunter and the whistleblower who triggered the impeachment probe after a Trump phone call with Ukraine's leader as witnesses.

As leader of the Democratic majority on the intelligence panel, Schiff controls which witnesses testify.

The witnesses this week will be U.S. diplomats who voiced concern over Trump asking Ukraine to investigate Joe Biden and Hunter, who was on the board of a Ukrainian gas company, on unspecified allegations of corruption.

The anonymous whistleblower set off the impeachment probe after Trump asked Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky in a phone call on July 25 to investigation the Bidens.

The inquiry and hearings "will not serve as venues for any Member to further the same sham investigations into the Bidens or into debunked conspiracies about 2016 U.S. election interference that President Trump pressed Ukraine to undertake for his personal political benefit," Schiff wrote in the note.

Republicans have so far shown little interest in removing Trump from office. REUTERS

Disney Plus is live: What it offers, where it streams, and how to get a free trial

You wished upon a star, and now it's happening ... Disney Plus has launched.

METRO STAFF
letters@metro.us

GETTY

It's certainly a magical time for streaming services, because Disney Plus, formally styled as Disney+, is finally here and fans in the U.S., Canada and the Netherlands officially have access now. There have been many questions asked about the new service being offered by the landmark company, and Metro has your answers and even sprinkled some pixie dust for a free trial. Here is everything you need to know about the highly-anticipated launch of Disney Plus.

Disney Plus costs $6.99 per month or $69.99 per year in the U.S. In Canada, it's $8.99 per month and $89.99 per year. There are also a few bundles linked with Hulu and ESPN+ available for purchase.

Fans can expect a wide variety of classic favorites from Walt Disney Studios, Marvel Studios, Twentieth Century Fox, Pixar, National Geographic, Lucasfilm and much more, offering thousands of TV episodes and hundreds of movies for audiences to enjoy. There will also be original content, including in-depth spinoffs from "Star Wars," "High School Musical" and the Marvel Universe, just to name a few. Disney Plus will mimic other popular streaming services like Netflix and launch content on specific days with a wide variety being offered within the first week.

There will be limitless access to classic Disney flicks and past seasons of your favorite series and exclusive new originals from the talented storytellers at Disney, Pixar, Marvel, Star Wars and Nat Geo. There is also unlimited downloads on up to 10 devices, so you can take Disney+ on the go as well as stream simultaneously on up to four different devices. Fans can even watch certain titles in 4K UHD and HDR.

"Okay, I'm sold," you're thinking. So how do you access Disney Plus? According to Forbes, Disney Plus will be available through Fire TV, Apple TV, Android, Roku, PlayStation 4, iOS, Chromecast, Xbox One, Samsung Smart TVs, LG Smart TVs and most web browsers.

Disney Plus launched Tuesday in the U.S. and the Netherlands. On Nov. 19, 2019, Disney+ will host another rollout in Australia and New Zealand. Fans in the UK, Spain, Germany, Italy and France will have to wait until the third and final rollout on March 31, 2020.

Disney Plus costs $6.99 per month or $69.99 per year in the U.S. In Canada, it's $8.99 per month and $89.99 per year. There are also a few bundles linked with Hulu and ESPN+ available for purchase.

Taking Back Sunday. GETTY IMAGES

This calls for a celebration

Lead vocalist Adam Lazzara talks 20 years of Taking Back Sunday.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

When thinking of accomplishments, having 20 years of anything is an incredible feat worth celebrating. For American rock band Taking Back Sunday, they are doing just that with their 20th-anniversary tour, but this showcase is set up a bit differently. On this tour, Taking Back Sunday will be performing their debut album "Tell All Your Friends" in its entirety, plus a selection of fan favorites from their colorful catalog, giving lifelong fans a nostalgic look into the band's origin and new fans a chance to fall in love with TBS from the very beginning. To add to the inventive concept, in cities where they are playing two nights, Taking Back Sunday will flip a coin to play either "Where You Want to Be" or "Louder Now," in addition to "Tell All Your Friends." It's this sort of set-up that has helped cement the beloved band into such a highly ranked category, and the secret to their success isn't as complicated as you would think: it all comes down to their pure love of making music. Taking Back Sunday's lead vocalist Adam Lazzara sat down with Metro to discuss the band's tour, the recent release of a 21-song career-spanning compilation ("Twenty") and overall why TBS in his mind still has more milestones to achieve.

What does it mean for you personally to celebrate such a milestone of 20 years with Taking Back Sunday?

It's kind of the wildest thing — as time goes by and you're living it, you don't really realize that so much time has passed. So to be able to sit down and really just kind of let that sink in, it's a pretty huge accomplishment. Every night on the tour we are just reminded of how lucky we are to be doing this in the first place. We've seen a lot of folks come and go, so it's special for us and we definitely don't take that for granted.

You have seen members come and go, but ultimately, what has kept Taking Back Sunday together for the past two decades?

I think it just comes down to that this is the only thing any of us have really ever wanted to do. Even through all of the ups and downs and highs and lows, that has always been at the forefront of all of our minds. I think with that comes this kind of sense that we can get through anything as long as we are able to continue to [make music].

Now jumping to your 20th-anniversary tour, you've set it up very uniquely. What was the inspiration behind setting the tour up that way?

You know, it kind of started out as a joke, and then we followed through with it. We knew we wanted to do some kind of celebration tour, I think if you reach 20 years of anything it should be celebrated. But we figured the best way to do it would be to go to the people that made it possible and these three records were the three that completely changed the course of our lives — so we want to make sure everybody that has been there for so long can experience that as well. That was part of the inspiration behind setting it up that way.

What do you think this nostalgic element will bring for fans who have been around since the beginning, but also maybe even for newer fans? Is this a way for them to see the band's earlier days and fall in love with TBS from the beginning?

I would hope so. One of the last tours we had done was playing one of our records "Tidal Wave" from start to finish, because we wanted to introduce it to people the way we had envisioned it being heard. So with this, our newer fans get to come back and see in real-time the evolution of our band. Hopefully, that will broaden their view of where we have been and how we got here.

Your album "Twenty" features some of your greatest hits and also two new songs. How did you choose which songs from your catalog to feature on that album?

We do everything as a band very democratically. So basically, we each made a list of what we thought should go on there. When we came back to compare it, they were really similar, very few differences. So from there, it was a couple of discussions of why did you pick this? We were all a little bit wary about doing it that way because we weren't sure if it would cause arguments, but it just worked out. We talked a lot so we could all feel like we were doing the right thing at that moment.

Are there any highlights that stand out to you from your career in the past 20 years?

There are so many — but I do remember we played a show in Long Island, and for the first time there were people singing along to our songs who weren't just our friends. I remember after that show John [Nolan] and I just sat in his car in silence, we just didn't know what to say. We were so excited. From there, I feel like with each record we've been able to hit so many different milestones. I feel like I could write a book about all of that stuff, we are fortunate to have so many. Really the main thing now is being able to go out on stage and having the connection to do what you love with the audience to where there's not a great divide with what is happening on stage and what's happening with the crowd. That's the thing we are most proud of.

Now looking to the future, what does it hold for Taking Back Sunday?

We have been taking this year to celebrate this thing that we were all a part of building, it's a pretty incredible feat to do that, so we have all been reveling in that. But we are looking forward to getting back into the studio, that's what we really all enjoy doing. Plus after touring it will be a nice change of pace to get back to only working on the creative. To be honest though, I feel like we have a ways to go and there's still a lot to say.

Emilia Clarke as Kate in "Last Christmas," directed by Paul Feig. UNIVERSAL PICTURES

"No actor likes to be pigeonholed" - EMILIA CLARKE

The British actress revealed how difficult it was to deal with her health problems during 'Game of Thrones.'

PATRICIA CARRANZA
letters@metro.us

Emilia Clarke stars in the new movie "Last Christmas," in which she leaves behind the sensual and empowered character of Khaleesi, Mother of Dragons from "Game of Thrones" to play Kate, a confused and aimless young woman. In an interview with Metro, the actress talked about this new role.

In "Last Christmas" we see a young woman looking for opportunities to show off her talent. Did you identify with Kate when you started?
Definitely, yes, because you have to work very hard. Before I could have a real job as an actress I had to prepare myself a lot in drama school and I had six previous jobs in different fields until I finally got a chance. You have to build your dreams, live and enjoy every experience no matter how bad it is. Like everyone else, at first I had fears and insecurities, but if you don't dare, you'll never make it. In that sense I identify very much with Kate because she is not a perfect girl, she is not the typical Hollywood idea about what women should be. She is not always smiling, she is disheveled and not afraid. So I could see myself in this character. She also has this fragile and sensitive side.

"Last Christmas" shows another facet of you – singing. Would you like to participate in a musical? And what kind of music do you prefer?
I love to sing and I always have. My father worked for many years as an audio engineer in musicals, so I grew up between stages and therefore also participated in many of them. When it comes to music, when I was younger I loved jazz and then ska but now I listen to different genres, so it is difficult to say.

Do you want to break the image of your character in "Game of Thrones" with this film?
I'm not really looking for that. I mean Khaleesi is a very important part of my life and I know it will be very difficult to overcome. But she is not me and we don't have anything in common, she's a very sensual character and I'm not. I'm aware that nothing I've done before has been as massive as "Game of Thrones," but I also think that no actor likes to be pigeonholed with a character. So, to be honest, in this movie I won't be seen with dragons. My goal is to keep growing in my career, that people continue to generate expectations of my work as an actress and I want to do that every chance I get. This time, "Last Christmas" is for another audience, for new looks, for people who like my work and especially for myself, because otherwise people get bored of you and sarcastically say 'ah look, the same character ... again.'

How did "Game of Thrones" change your life?
My whole world changed, my way of thinking and my way of looking at life. It was one of the projects that allowed me to give a complete turn to my career. But when I thought I was at my best, I got sick so suddenly that I asked myself 'Why? I've worked so hard for this.' And I didn't want to say anything to HBO because it was 2011 and they trusted me, they were the first who didn't criticize me for my appearance and gave me a role as strong as Khaleesi, so I didn't want to disappoint them. But the truth is that I almost died from an aneurysm, which kept me in the hospital for five days. But the best thing is that it didn't discourage me because when you're young you don't know what's going on. That's where Kate and I are very much alike, I feel that's why I managed to connect so much with this character.

Do you put career before your health?
Of course! 100 percent that's the actor's life. When you look around you see a jungle of people looking for an opportunity, then when something like :Game of Thrones" comes into your hands you can't miss it, they are opportunities that come only once in a lifetime. Khaleesi was able to put me to the test many times because three years ago my father died and I also had to recover to continue working. And despite all that nothing would change because it has been a wonderful experience.

Feast on the holiday magic

Madison Iseman talks new holiday film "Feast of the Seven Fishes."

MOLLY GIVEN

Madison Iseman and Skyler Gisondo in "Feast of the Seven Fishes." PROVIDED

Every family has their own tradition for the holidays: some sentimental, some habitual and others a bit, well, chaotic. What those traditions have in common is the sentimental value that people hold so closely during this time of the year. That exact sentiment is what you'll find with Robert Tinnell's latest film "Feast of the Seven Fishes," based on his graphic novel and cookbook of the same name. Tinnell drew from his family life to construct the story following the loveable Tony (Skyler Gisondo) and his eccentrically charming family who are preparing to celebrate their intense Christmas Eve tradition when he meets the sweet and a bit misunderstood Beth (Madison Iseman). Through just one night, Beth and Tony form a bond that helps both of their hearts while also causing a few frenzied yet relatable problems. The film truly is a piping hot serving of holiday magic, and Madison Iseman sat down with Metro to chat about her role, the story and what she hopes audiences take away from "Feast of the Seven Fishes."

Have you ever been involved with a Feast of the Seven Fishes before the film?
Actually, I had never even heard of the Feast of the Seven Fishes, but it was exciting because when we filmed we were right in the middle of West Virginia during the holidays and we were very much immersed in the culture and got to experience it firsthand. Especially with Robert Tinnell and his family, they just invited us right in with open arms. My family doesn't really celebrate in that way, we do our own traditions on Christmas and Christmas Eve but nowhere near as extensive as the Feast of the Seven Fishes. It was really exciting to see.

I know Robert Tinnell also wrote the story as a graphic novel and cookbook. Before filming did you end up reading the novel?
Yes, we actually all got a copy of the book which was really cool. Some of the graphics were really closely related to the rest of the cast which was interesting.

How was it working with Robert Tinnell as a director and the rest of the cast on the film?
It was really just such a fun experience. We were very much right in the center of everything in Robert's great-grandmother's home where he spent all of his Christmases before. That made it extra special, especially with his family so involved, they did most of the cooking that was in the film as well. I really don't like seafood, so it was a little difficult to eat the actual seafood, but honestly, they are all amazing cooks and it really was just like one massive party the whole time we were filming. Then just with the cast alone, Paul [Ben-Victor], Skyler, Josh [Helman] – everyone was down to have fun and it just felt easy to work with the rest of the cast. But we were all together in that tiny house while it was snowing around the holidays, so it felt like one big family reunion on-screen and off-screen even though we didn't all really know each other.

Why do you think your character, Beth was so drawn into Tony's family and spending the holidays with them without really knowing them?
Beth is this girl that no one really has heard of because she spent most of her time away at private school and was away for the summers. She has kind of always had her life laid out in front of her. I think because of that she's always been very curious about the rest of the world, and she feels that from Tony too which is why they connect so well. They both have this intellectual curiosity about other things outside of the normal. So from then, she starts to challenge her family and society on what a young woman is supposed to do and how she's supposed to act. So I think it really is that curiosity that leads her there, and I think she also finds a piece of herself in Tony. I think she's open to diving right in because she's ready to step away from what she's had her entire life.

The movie ends a bit open-ended, but where do you think Beth will go from there?
I actually talked a lot about that with Robert, because the movie does kind of leave it open-ended. I think from there on, whatever relationship Beth and Tony have with each other, they are both going to start following their real paths of what they should be doing. Beth is finally sticking to what she wants to do instead of listening to her parents and society. Whatever happens, I think they needed each other to find where they are supposed to be. So it could be anything in a way.

Overall, what do you hope audiences take away from the film?
I hope it puts everyone in the Christmas spirit. It's a love story, it's a family story and it's a story about finding who you are, but I think more than anything it's also a holiday movie. It will put you in the mood for that warm fuzzy feeling that everyone gets around Christmas.

"Feast of the Seven Fishes" opens in select theaters and on VOD on Nov. 15.

Pete Alonso was named the 2019 National League Rookie of the Year on Monday night. GETTY IMAGES

IT DOESN'T MATTER THAT ALONSO WASN'T UNANIMOUS ROY

PANTORNO'S PERCH

JOE PANTORNO
@JoePantorno

To the surprise of no one, Pete Alonso won the National League Rookie of the Year Award on Monday night, becoming the sixth Met ever to win the honor — joining Tom Seaver, Jon Matlack, Darryl Strawberry, Dwight Gooden and Jacob deGrom.

The award was the finishing stroke to a masterpiece of a rookie campaign that saw the 24-year old lead the majors in home runs with 53 while setting an MLB rookie record for most round-trippers in a season. He also led the National League with 85 extra-base hits, drove in 120 runs and had an OPS of .941.

A loaded stat line such as that had most of the baseball world believing that Alonso would be the 13th unanimous NL Rookie of the Year.

That wasn't the case, however.

Alonso received 29 of the 30 first-place votes as Andrew Baggarly of The Athletic decided to pick Atlanta Braves starter Mike Soroka as his No. 1 choice.

Cue the outrage.

The San Francisco Giants beat writer was vilified, chastised, scolded, berated, thrashed, flogged, reprimanded, chided, admonished; whatever you'd like to call it. Twitter is a weird place and people spend way too much time on it looking to pick virtual fights all too often to bring some sort of twisted validation into their empty lives.

Do I believe that Alonso should have been unanimously selected for the award? Absolutely.

But Baggarly — who was accused of trying to be a story rather than just reporting on it — stated his case instead of going into hiding.

It is a compelling one, based on the fact that Soroka prevented home runs in a season where the ball was flying out of the yard at historic paces.

He brought in advanced stats to back up his case, stating that Soroka eclipsed Alonso in Win Probability Added, Wins Above Average and Baseball Reference's Wins Above Replacement calculations that took FIP out of the equation.

If that's what you're looking at when casting your vote, that's cool by me — even though I still think it was the wrong decision.

Alonso being the consummate professional that he is, provided some sanity to all this.

"To just win the award, it doesn't matter if it's unanimous or not," Alonso said. "It's such a blessing. To just have that title is unbelievable. So whether it's unanimous or not, to me it doesn't matter."

Mets fans: Pete Alonso is the National League Rookie of the Year.

Take it. Enjoy it. And save your whining for the winter when ownership opts not to spend money on top-tier roster upgrades.

Barkley deemed fine despite mystery injury

Could a shutdown be the best option for the Giants' star running back?

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

Saquon Barkley was held to one rushing yard against the Jets. GETTY IMAGES

Saquon Barkley hasn't been Saquon Barkley since returning from his ankle injury.

The second-year star running back for the Giants had a dismal day against the Jets on Sunday when he rushed the ball 13 times for one, single yard.

It was the worst game of his career during a stretch that has seen him trail off within the Giants offense.

In the four games since his return from an ankle injury suffered during the second quarter of Week 3 against the Buccaneers, Barkley has looked mortal. He has posted 165 rushing yards on 64 attempts for a lackluster 2.58 yards per carry.

In his first two games of the season, he ripped through the Cowboys for 120 yards on 11 carries before going for 107 on 18 rushes against the Bills.

The ankle injury was expected to sideline last year's Offensive Rookie of the Year for anywhere between 6-8 weeks. Barkley, however, was back in just four.

He hasn't looked nearly as explosive since his return, but head coach Pat Shurmur and the Giants' supporting cast isn't doing him any favors.

According to ESPN, Barkley was hit before he got to the line of scrimmage on 11 of his 13 carries against the Jets, who pummeled the 22-year-old.

He was seen walking gingerly into the Giants' X-ray room after the game. The apparent injury is undisclosed, though the Giants say he's "fine."

But Shurmur — who is making no friends in New York this season — is playing with fire.

When asked if there was a plan to shut Barkley down for the rest of the season, the second-year head coach said: "Absolutely not."

While the much-maligned head coach quickly shot down such an idea, one could make an argument about why it isn't really such a bad idea.

This after Shurmur was called out on multiple occasions for underutilizing his star rusher while healthy.

The lifespan of running backs in the NFL is quite short. Especially when it comes to their prime seasons.

For a Giants team that is 2-8 and has an offensive line that continuously leaves Barkley out to dry, the risk of running a hobbled back out every week to finish a lost season is an unnecessary one.

Red-hot Isles host Tavares, Leafs tonight

The New York Islanders have remained the hottest team in hockey following a weekend victory over the Florida Panthers in Brooklyn.

The 2-1 result behind goals from Mathew Barzal and Scott Mayfield — along with the stellar goaltending of Thomas Greiss (37 saves) — was the Islanders' 11th win in 12 games.

That's 23 of a possible 24 points as the Islanders sit in second place int he Metropolitan Division despite having played fewer games than the other four teams in the top five.

But tonight (7 p.m. ET, MSG+) at Nassau Coliseum will mean even more for Islanders fans other than just keeping the point streak alive.

GETTY IMAGES

The Toronto Maple Leafs come to town for the first time this season and with it, the return of former captain John Tavares, who spurned the organization two summers ago to sign with his hometown team.

While his departure had many leaving the Islanders for dead, they put up a 103-point season and made it further into the postseason that the loaded Leafs did.

Toronto — which named Tavares their captain on opening night this season — sits in second place in the Atlantic Division with 22 points in 19 games. That's three fewer than the Islanders' total in three more games.

The Islanders took two of three meetings against the Maple Leafs last season, including a 6-1 beatdown in Tavares' return to the Nassau Coliseum on Feb. 28.

horoscopes

Aries Decide on a destination and enjoy the ride. Getting out of your regular routine will be uplifting. Romance is in the stars.

Taurus It's up to you to enforce change. Look over your options and discuss your plans with someone who may want to participate in them.

Gemini Emotions will surface when dealing with affairs of the heart. Question anything that doesn't sound legitimate. Know when to say no.

Cancer Take a chance and try something new. Sometimes, a change is exactly what you need to boost your enthusiasm and get you back on track.

Leo Put more thought into how you present yourself to others. When you look and feel your best, it's easier to drum up support. Romance will enhance your personal life.

Virgo Look for the right opportunity. Don't give in to someone who brings you down instead of lifting you up. Take part in rallies or events that stimulate your mind and promote new prospects.

Libra You'll feel differently if you are happy with your appearance. Do something to lift your spirits, help you relax and encourage a better relationship with a loved one.

Scorpio Retreat due to uncertainty isn't wise. Refuse to let someone from your past influence your next move. Don't give up what you've got just to appease someone undeserving.

Sagittarius Stick to the truth, regardless of what someone else tells you. Offer your services to those who have legitimate needs. If you show your enthusiasm, you'll get what you want.

Capricorn Don't get angry when you can get moving. If you want something to happen, it's up to you to make it happen. Change begins with you. Reach out and connect with someone from your past.

Aquarius Don't lose sight of your goal. A personal matter can be resolved if you are honest about what you want and what you are willing to do in return.

Pisces A financial change is heading your way. Being open and honest will help move paperwork along much faster. Do your part when it comes to community assistance. EUGENIA LAST
